

February 29, 2004

Leap Day Action Night

We're stuck in a rut

Are you gonna use your extra day like you use up so many other days — slaving away at your job to make the bosses richer? Using up more of the earth's resources while the forests, the oceans and free communities wither and die? Watching it all go on around you — an "information consumer" — feeling helpless to do anything to resist it? Life is far too short to spend days, weeks, years just getting by — getting treated like an object. How much of your life do you really get to control? How often are you really fully alive and free?

Imagine . . .

. . . everyone who feels smothered living a mediocre life within the current insane system taking individual responsibility to resist in whatever way they can. Making a leap of action — as free individuals — taking time to live life like it really mattered

Leap forth on Leap Day!

Leaping is good—its fun, it looks good, it gets you out of the grind of the everyday, you very literally leave the earth, fly free, weightless — who knows where you'll end up?

March, Critical Mass, run amok

Meet @ 6 p.m. • Berkeley BART

Bring running shoes, masks, bikes, disguises, skateboards, noise makers, signs . . .

Sponsored by Ad Hoc Committee for Leap Day Action Night and Crafts & Insurance Convergence