

*They are taking away all I have, my life,
my culture, my homeland... All I have left are my dreams and footprints to show you that I was here. This they cannot take from me and I will fight forever.*

RESISTANCE AT BIG MOUNTAIN

I belong to the land. I am rooted in my Mother Earth. Her deserts, canyons and mesas encircle me. Her mountains, fields and forests are a part of me. - Danny Blackgoat

Since 1974, federal relocation policy has forced 14,000 Diné (Navajo) people from their ancestral homeland in Arizona. This genocidal policy was crafted by government agents and energy company representatives in order to gain access to the mineral resources of Black Mesa - billions of tons of coal, uranium, and natural gas. For over 30 years, traditional Diné at Black Mesa have lived in resistance, steadfastly refusing to relocate as strip-mines rip apart their sacred lands and generating plants poison the desert air.

FILM SCREENING:

BROKEN RAINBOW

An Academy Award winning feature film.

SPEAKER:

DANNY BLACKGOAT

Traveling from his home at Big Mountain, Danny Blackgoat (son of Roberta Blackgoat) will speak about his experience of the "land dispute" and recent happenings.

A benefit for the 2009 Fall Caravan to Black Mesa

On November 21st, work crews from Santa Cruz and all across the country will converge in support of the indigenous resistance communities of Big Mountain.

Donations of tools, food, and other supplies are requested.
