We invite you to join us for this event that will include a presentation by Greg Thomas, a renowned associate professor of rhetoric at Syracuse University.

As the US economy continues in a deep recession, millions of people are struggling to find jobs, housing and access to basic services. Youth and people of color are two of the hardest hit groups. With the rising cost of public education, the lack of good-paying jobs, and mounting debt, which can never be paid off, young people are finding that their costly education does not guarantee them a dignified future under this economy.

Due to years of institutionalized racism and oppression for communities of color, particularly Blacks and Latinos, the access to any future is not only made difficult, but it's difficulty is intensified with the increasing incarceration and killing of people of color by police.

Why is it necessary for us to join the movements against oppression? How do we organize our communities to fight back? How can different communities come together in order achieve real liberation?
