

FIGHTING BACK: How America's Workers are Struggling for Dignity and a Decent Life

Despite growing poverty and inequality in America, some of our lowest-paid and most exploited workers—in fast foods and domestic work—have been organizing to defend their rights and improve their conditions. In August, fast-food workers went on strike in cities across America. Here in California, domestic workers have struggled for, and won, a landmark Domestic Workers Bill of Rights. And the fight goes on...

Join these activists in the front lines of the struggle and hear their story:

- Katie Joaquin, Campaign Coordinator, California Domestic Workers Coalition
- Andrew Dadko, Program Director, East Bay Alliance for a Sustainable Economy (EBASE)
