

YOUTH OF EL SALVADOR: Fighting to make migration an option, not a necessity

When border detention centers filled with children and families this summer, politicians finally started talking about the violence and economic inequality that have displaced millions of Central Americans. Some in the US government think that military funding is the solution. But the new government of El Salvador understands that investment in healthcare, education and equality is the path to make sure families can safely stay in their communities. Come learn what role young people are playing to build an alternative and how you can help!

Join a youth worker from El Salvador's revolutionary government in a discussion about how young people in El Salvador are addressing the root causes of forced migration through youth participation, community action and violence prevention.

Featuring: Alba Santana Director of Social, Environmental and Cultural Inclusion of the National Youth Institute of El Salvador

When: November 16, 2014

Time: 4pm

Where: Beach Flats
Community Center
133 Leibbrandt Ave Santa
Cruz, CA

*Food and Refreshments will be provided

