

Prospects for Peaceful Co-Existence on the Korean Peninsula

Can we block a march toward war?

THURSDAY,
APRIL 26,
2018

7 – 9 pm

SF Unitarian-
Universalist
Center, Chapel

*1187 Franklin St.
(Corner Geary),
San Francisco*

- Wheelchair accessible
- Snacks and beverages served

Co-sponsored by San Francisco Progressive Democrats of America (www.facebook.com/PDASanFrancisco/) and Gray Panthers of San Francisco (<http://graypantherssf.igc.org/>)

For the first time in more than half a century, North and South Korea are approaching a cautious rapprochement. This tentative thaw may result partly from South Korea's legitimate fear of its northern neighbor's nuclear force, but it is also due to South Korean President Moon Jae-in's adroit diplomacy and commitment to a long-term solution of the conflict.

Meanwhile, although President Trump plans to meet with North Korean Premier Kim Jong-Un in May, he has not appointed an ambassador to South Korea—but he has appointed notorious warhawks to the positions of Secretary of State and National Security Advisor, and continues issuing dire threats of further sanctions and military action.

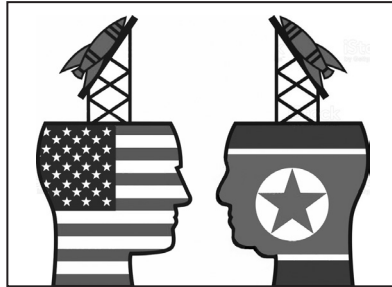

Under these complex and contradictory conditions, what are the prospects for peace—and how can US progressives pressure our government to pursue them?

SPEAKERS:

Conn M. Hallinan, Columnist for Foreign Policy In Focus; independent journalist; former director of the journalism program and college provost at UC Santa Cruz

Eun-Joung Lee, Independent innovation and organizational change consultant; speaker on wartime experiences of her Korean parents and others of their generation

Sharat G. Lin, Research fellow and past president of the San Jose Peace and Justice Center; writer and lecturer on global political economy, labor migration, social movements, and public health

Prospects for Peaceful Co-Existence on the Korean Peninsula

Can we block a march toward war?

THURSDAY,
APRIL 26,
2018

7 – 9 pm

SF Unitarian-
Universalist
Center, Chapel

*1187 Franklin St.
(Corner Geary),
San Francisco*

- Wheelchair accessible
- Snacks and beverages served

Co-sponsored by San Francisco Progressive Democrats of America (www.facebook.com/PDASanFrancisco/) and Gray Panthers of San Francisco (<http://graypantherssf.igc.org/>)

For the first time in more than half a century, North and South Korea are approaching a cautious rapprochement. This tentative thaw may result partly from South Korea's legitimate fear of its northern neighbor's nuclear force, but it is also due to South Korean President Moon Jae-in's adroit diplomacy and commitment to a long-term solution of the conflict.

Meanwhile, although President Trump plans to meet with North Korean Premier Kim Jong-Un in May, he has not appointed an ambassador to South Korea—but he has appointed notorious warhawks to the positions of Secretary of State and National Security Advisor, and continues issuing dire threats of further sanctions and military action.

Under these complex and contradictory conditions, what are the prospects for peace—and how can US progressives pressure our government to pursue them?

SPEAKERS:

Conn M. Hallinan, Columnist for Foreign Policy In Focus; independent journalist; former director of the journalism program and college provost at UC Santa Cruz

Eun-Joung Lee, Independent innovation and organizational change consultant; speaker on wartime experiences of her Korean parents and others of their generation

Sharat G. Lin, Research fellow and past president of the San Jose Peace and Justice Center; writer and lecturer on global political economy, labor migration, social movements, and public health

