

Restore Health, Safety, & Decency

- With scant documentation of complaints or vandalism, in 2017 and 2018, Parks and Recreation [P&R] Supervisor Iseth Rae established segregated exclusionary bathrooms at Louden Nelson in March 2018, locking them to all but “program participants”.
- At last Monday’s P&R Commission meeting, P&R Boss Tony Elliot turned Councilmember Drew Glover’s original “Open the Bathrooms” proposal upside down into a “Keep Them Closed” recommendation citing wildly exaggerated but undocumented claims of vandalism.
- With no documentation justifying the year-long closure in the staff report, the P&R Commission voted June 1st for continued closure unless state law requires reopening.
- Louden Nelson staff, sometimes apparently unwillingly, continue to deny elderly, disabled, homeless people in need of a bathroom the right to use the publicly-funded Louden Nelson bathroom in violation of years of tradition. The ACLU ended meeting there in protest last year.
- Some employees report they would like break the Bathroom Ban, but fear losing their jobs.
- Seniors are denied access if they need to use them outside their “allotted time” from 10:45 a.m. to 2:15 p.m. Anyone not in approved program is sent to the Police Department a block away or Depot Park regardless of medical condition, age, or need unless they are “in a program”.
- The actions seem to be part of an anti-homeless narrative that punishes those outside for vandalism, drug use, and unspecified “illegal behavior”. In response, the same staff has apparently backed the creation of fences around the park and a First Alarm guard.
- Seven of the candidates running for City Council last year publicly called for reopening the bathrooms including Drew Glover, Justin Cummins, Donna Meyers, Phil Crawford, Cynthia Hawthorn, David Lane, and Greg Larson. The only one not to do so at the RCNV Election forum was Richelle Niroyan who was defeated in November. Council, under the thumb of Mayor Watkins, has sidelined proposals and refused to act.
